“installation rhetoric assists us in un-installing the ideological programming that often blinds us to the frequent, pervasive, and persuasive normativization of bodily representation”
Alexander and Rhodes

“such moments of reflection, particularly if felt in the body, might prompt ways of considering our bodies, and their interpolation in particular rhetorics of the body, in ways that are… productive of new ways of thinking...connections between rhetorics and bodies”
Alexander and Rhodes

“what do such moments of disorientation tell us? what do they do, and what can we do with them?”
Ahmed

“any failure to recognize the potential implications for bodies is a failure to imagine the implications of textual materiality”
Alexander and Rhodes

“use words to make whatever communications already at work between vibrant bodies more audible, more detectable, more senseable”
Bennett

“most of the swirl of activities around us are screened off or allowed simply to pass through’ our bodies; only a few are isolated for attention and become ‘perceptions’ by their very isolation” Bergson

nonhuman powers!
material agency

provoking embodied responses might be the most powerful way to engage critical thinking about...flows...desires...intimacies Alexander and Rhodes